DEBATISSE-LUCCHI

Josiane Debatisse (1955) received her first lesson from watercolour masters but she then turned up to mixed media on canvas or paper. One can say that movement controls her abstract landscapes that also include some musical memories as well as a free and large definition of space. Watercolour is rather present in some folded papers along with collage and staves are literally exploding, sending the notes all around. Some time ago, the artist was a teacher, then she became a mother and assumed the education of her children, now she is not the kind of woman to sit down and wait for time passing by. She tries to show her creations in various groups or galleries and never hesitates in front of competitions because she knows her works are not common ones. Working about movement and colour at the same time, it seems that she will extend her pictorial world in the near future to reach the strength of a big symphony. She exhibits here with Bruno Lucchi, a sculptor for whom no detail was sent but from the only picture in hand one can see he is an interesting artist.
